Constructive Credit for War Plans Seminar

1. The question has arisen whether persons who attended the ten-day War Plans Seminar in January 1954 should be given constructive credit for completion of the War Plans Staff Course.

2. After considerable discussion, it is our feeling that constructive credit should be given to those persons who: a) attended at least eight of the ten sessions, and b) have received sufficient on-the-job training in war planning, in your judgment, to fill any gaps in their knowledge which would be otherwise filled by attending the course.

3. Attached is a list of the people who attended the seminar and to what extent. Perhaps you would be good enough to spend a few minutes determining which people, in the light of the above factors, should be given constructive credit. We will then enter your decision accordingly. On the other hand, if you feel no one should be given constructive credit for the course, we shall be glad to abide by your wishes.
